

SIZZLING POETRY ANALYZES ITALIANS

New York Colony Excited
Over Woman's War.

HAD A RAZOR FOR REVIEWER

Poetess of Passion Objected to Criticisms With Fiery Enthusiasm.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—No misnomer lurks in the poem called "The Tempest," which is now shaking all of that part of Italy which is in New York. The arrangement in the Jefferson Market police court yesterday on the charge of attempting to assault feloniously Albert A. De Rosa, one of her meretricious reviewers, is only an incident of the literary war.

The modern Sappho was discharged by Magistrate Zeller, as the complainant weakened in his determination to prosecute her, but the end of the controversy is not yet. Mrs. Barone, if she feels in the mood, will make another descent upon the office of "La Pietra Infernale," a weekly journal edited by De Rosa, the editor, and if he agrees never again to refer to her or her poetry peace may be established.

Talk of a Suit.
If he does not the columns of a rival weekly literary journal to which she is a valued contributor are open to her and she says that she can write more bitter poetry in an hour than he can write prose in a day.

Besides the poetess of passion is contemplating bringing a heavy suit for libel against De Rosa on the ground that in his criticisms of her under the title of the "Baroness" he had unwarranted reflections on her personal character.

There is not in all the Italian colony a more beautiful woman than Adele Barone. She is tall and thin, and her oval face, her black eyes, and her olive complexion help to illuminate her face of beauty. Love is her favorite theme, for although she has been two years married, her life is all romance.

Heated Sentences.
Her last poem, "The Tempest," reproduced in "La Pietra Infernale," with the slightest reference which aroused her ire, is translated as follows:

Oh! do you remember that day, best of days,
As we walked in the park?
I was speaking to you of our newly found love.

As we strolled amid the flowers;
And it was then that you said, in accents so sweet,
We must everything chance.

Oh, surely you cannot forget
Those days filled with tenderness and visions so fond.
Ah! will they never return!

They will not return. I ask my heart in sadness,
"We shall see them never again!"
You answer, "The fair haired boy,
The young god of love,
Has lifted his wings and flown."

Says Rude Things.
"This man De Rosa," said the poetess, "has been in the habit of saying rude things about Italian ladies and gentlemen, and when I saw what he had written about me I took my husband and my brother-in-law and one or two other gentlemen and went to his office. I had one small club and also a razor, for I feared that I might meet five or six men and have to defend myself. Oh, yes, I think I had a club in my hand. I was just talking over our differences when he sent for the police."

"Ever since I refused to dance with him at my godmother's ball three years ago they have been saying mean things about me, and now it is time that his persecutions should come to an end."
